Striking deals on eBay with the Wii

New “Jaast for Wii” solution for the popular Nintendo gaming console makes browsing and buying on eBay easier for millions of users.

Ebstorf, June 24, 2008. — The new application, Jaast, is already available and provides fans of the Nintendo Wii gaming console an ideal solution for conveniently accessing eBay. The software utilizes users’ existing eBay logins, displays their personal My eBay page, allows searching, bidding, and buying on the Wii and shows item locations in Google Maps. Wii users can scroll through eBay categories and navigate the website using their revolutionary Wii Controllers.

The idea impressed eBay so much that the application was awarded the eBay Star Developer Award for Most Innovative Application at the 2008 eBay Developer Conference in Chicago this June. The prize is awarded annually for a particularly innovative eBay application.

Jaast for Wii is a more advanced version of Scendix Software’s freeware program mceAuction ported to Nintendo's popular gaming console. mceAuction makes eBay accessible via Microsoft's Windows Media Center on a television or an Xbox 360. Scendix Software received eBay Germany’s Most Innovative Buyer Application award in 2005 and the eBay Star Developer Award for Most Innovative Application in 2006 for the program. This success inspired the developers to create a Wii version of the software and relaunch it under its new name, Jaast.

Wii is currently the most successful gaming console on the market with nearly 27 million units sold. Since most Wii players have their console connected to the Internet, access to eBay is a real plus for them, especially since Jaast for Wii doesn't cost the user anything.

The new software for the Wii supports several languages and 23 international eBay sites (ebay.de, ebay.com, ebay.co.uk and many more). All that's needed is a Wii console with Internet access and the Opera Web browser for Wii.
